Consider Yourself Invited!

Well, it's almost time again. The Ides of March bode not only little early Stone Flies, but also our popular PastaFest. Many chapter members rely on this event to gear up for the coming season be it with rods, reels, fly selections or booking guided trips. Others come just to enjoy the wonderful Italian food, courtesy of the Salemi family, or just to socialize. A three-dollar ticket can win you a beautiful thousand-dollar rod-reel-line set and silent auction items typically sell well below their wholesale value. Perhaps the most spirited event is the live auction featuring trips guided by well-known NE Guides, both fresh and salt. If you've been before then I'm confident we will see you March 20th. If you have not attended our banquet before, this is your year to participate in what has become a much-looked-forward-to tradition for many.

The past year offered fun, informative meetings with the focus, most appropriately, on trout. Almost a year ago Fran Smith showed us the way the devotion of chapters and the clout of the council could get things done. Fran and his volunteers spend thousands of hours hip-deep in the coastal streams of Cape Cod improving habitat, and have also lobbied for, and were ultimately granted, millions of dollars for acquiring land that buffers these waters to protect them from encroachment.

In April we got the State Fisheries perspective from Ken Simmons, who helped debunk some of the myths surrounding hatchery capacities etc. Before summer break we had the very special May meeting featuring lots of fly tying and twenty years' worth of slides by yours truly.

The first fall program featured Jim, Brad & John's July 2004 two-week expedition in Montana, as well as our christening of the new Drumlin Farm parking lot. Warren Winders came up from Southeast in October to update us regarding ongoing work at Red Brook, and to share how things are looking up for its rare salter brookies. Following our lead, TU National profiled Warren and Red Brook in the winter issue of Trout. In November, the Green Mountain State's noted guide Brad Yoder delivered an inspired presentation on the White River and its tributaries. Besides the 2003 TU PastaFest: President Jim Miller presents three $1,000 donations to Charles Gauvin, TU CEO and guest speaker, to support TU conservation efforts.

President's Streamside Chat

The other day some fellow anglers and I were discussing a phenomenon we all seem to experience each March, not at all akin, perhaps, to basketball's "March madness", but eligible for the title just the same. It manifests in convincing oneself that spring has indeed arrived, then investing the time and effort to drive to your favorite trout stream only to find high, steely grey water, devoid of life. Even if the water has holdover fish they will seldom begin to show activity before the water temperatures are in the high forties. And, aside from midges and little stoneflies, the same holds true for most insects. If you are relying on stockers, the trucks usually rumble out the third week in March and do the ponds first. Some rivers don't receive their first stocking until mid-April. So, am I going to be patient this year and wait for the trees to bud, resisting the urge to make my annual madman's misadventure? Heck no. After all, somebody has to be first!

All TU members should look for signs of wild trout this summer, particularly brookies, on their property or places they fish, walk the dog, etc. The two campaigns being driven hardest by TU National this year are The New England Brook Trout Initiative, and Back the Brookie. TU offers strategies and remedies we can utilize to improve and secure fish habitats and populations, but we need to identify areas needing specific projects in order to qualify for the assistance. Your link to TU after this issue of Currents and until next fall will be our fine website, www.gbtu.org, so please check it often and share with us your adventures, thoughts, musings or anything else you think might be of interest to GBTU.
